MAMMOTH ANNOUNCES SUPPORT OF 'IT STOPS WITH ME' CAMPAIGN TO END DOMESTIC VIOLENCE

DENVER – The Colorado Mammoth announced today that it has partnered with Courage is Change, a local non-profit, in support of the organization's 'It STOPS with ME' campaign to end domestic violence. The Mammoth and Courage is Change will work together in the upcoming months to promote the non-profit's mission of empowering people to 'create non-violent communities through healthy relationship development.'

"It is vital to ensure that people of all ages feel safe and secure in their respective environments," said Mammoth President and General Manager Steve Govett. "Just as we have created a safe environment for our fans inside Pepsi Center at Mammoth games, we are excited to begin working with Courage is Change to procure safety in our local communities and put an end, once and for all, to domestic violence."

The Mammoth's first initiative involves the creation of a public service announcement, which will begin to air on television and radio stations in the upcoming weeks, that will feature several Mammoth players taking the 'It STOPS with ME' pledge. Then, the two organizations will work jointly to promote several local events that promote the cause.

"I'm thrilled that the Colorado Mammoth has embraced what Courage is Change stands for, and that the organization is so supportive of our mission," said Liz Oster, the non-profit's co-founder. "Having such a well-respected franchise stand behind our campaign will significantly help our mission."
